

While my creative director (Michael Avery) was overall satisfied with how the website was progressing and my ideas, there were some areas to improve upon. One area to change is to include more imagery. He liked the recurring images of the different helmets worn by the packers over time as the timeline descended, and he requested more of that sort of image. Another adjustment was to add responsiveness to the webpage. It looks good at a full screen window, but at smaller sizes it becomes scrambled. He recommended changes at a 50% width. Finally, another change was to edit the information provided in the historical events. My creative director wanted to include more information about MVP's and to change the order of some of the events, and he wanted to provide some further information to include. I will refine the information and edit it accordingly. Another adjustment is to change the html code to a more organized system of parent and child divs. That will help with the spacing of information and the length of the white timeline itself, which wouldn't adjust its size thus far.
